

Had Broken Into Flat While Child's Mother Was Away, but Victim's Cries Were Heard by Neighbors.

During the absence this afternoon of Mrs, Catherine Cardin from her home, No. 131 Baltic street, Brooklyn, William Brown, her brother, twenty-nine years old, entered the flat where Katie, seven years old, and Helen, five years old, were awaiting the return of their mother, and according to witnesses, outraged the elder of the two girls.

Mrs. Mullens, a neighbor, heard the cries of Katie and made furious attack upon Brown, who fled to the fire-escape. Finding himself cornered there, the man returned to the apartment and, raising a stovelifter, threatened to brain Mrs. Mullens.

Mrs. Mullens's screams brought other neighbors and they combined in an attack upon the man, who then fled to the street.

There he was met by a mob of fully a hundred residents of near-by houses, as well as passersby who had been attracted by the screams of Mrs. Mullens, and Brown was grabbed. He was thrown upon the side walk and beaten with fists and sticks until almost insensible.

Capt. Devanney, of the precinct, sent the reserves to the scene, fol lowing a call for police protection, and Brown was rescued. The man was later arraigned in the Adams Street Court and held.

Dr. Towsey, of the Children's Society, made a report to the effect that the assault upon little Katie was most atrocia.
